

ASHHRA 2015 Conference Attendees Cite Employee Retention as the Driver Behind Total Reward Statement Initiatives

Atlanta, Georgia, October 29, 2015 – Dollar Compensation Statements received incredibly positive feedback from American Society for Healthcare Human Resources Administration (ASHHRA) 2015 Conference attendees.

Personnel shortages continues to rank in the top ten concerns listed by hospital CEOs according to a recent survey by the American College of Healthcare Executives. In our informal survey of attendees, most attendees mentioned employee satisfaction with pay and benefits as the number one reason they were considering providing their employees with Total Reward Statements in 2016. Nine out of ten employers we met received feedback on their employee survey indicating dissatisfaction in the area of pay and benefits.

Dollar Compensation Statements helps organizations improve their employees' perceptions by clarifying the hidden value of benefits and time off. The total rewards package employers provide their employees is one of their biggest expenses, yet employees don't recognize the cost of health benefits and other perks as part of their total reward package.
